Dear Bill:

I am anxious to see Harry Ungerleider given some professional and social recognition for the part his work, his ideas and teachings have played over the years in clinical cardiology and research.

I would be grateful for your considering the appropriateness of this idea and for your advice on whether a mechanism might be sought either within the College of Cardiology, or in collaboration with it.

I have thought of several possibilities: a purely social affair among the insurance people, a scientific lectureship sponsored by his former insurance companies, a national conference, in his honor, in which the best of insurance researches and data might be laid before a broad medical audience, etc.

Have you any ideas or feelings on the matter. The plan should remain confidential.

Things go well on Sabbatical here.

Cordially,

Henry Blackburn, M.D.
