Dear Friend:

Having returned safely to my frigid northland, I want to express my gratitude to you for the kind hospitality of your family. It was a rare privilege to sit and talk frankly and openly about your rich culture and the profound problems of South Africa in the modern world.

I know of no way that I can appropriately thank you for your warm, generous, and open reception of a foreigner, to whom you had no obligations other than a natural friendship.

Rest assured that I would be grateful for the opportunity to be of service to you or to any member of your family traveling in this country.

Meanwhile, give my thanks and warm greetings to each member of your family who contributed to such a pleasant day in your community and home.

Cordially,

Henry Blackburn, M.D.
Professor and Director

P.S. We have recently had the pleasure of receiving Lisa Seftel in our home. Her family is a remarkable and delightful one.
