

Makaraska, September 21, 1963.

To our Yugoslav hosts and friends.

~~Please~~ ~~just~~ Let me add just one more postscript, but a very important one and accidentally overlooked by myself during my remarks last evening. And that is a word of sincere appreciation to our Yugoslav hosts and many other friends for their most kind and generous hospitality to us all on the occasion of this memorable meeting at Makaraska, and also, and especially, for their years of most helpful and stimulating cooperation in these epidemiological international team researches ever since I myself began to be involved in them in the early spring of 1954, nearly ten years ago. It has always been for me and, I am sure, for many others too, a most encouraging harbinger of the international good will which has slowly grown up through the past decade. I am sure that I express herewith not only my own appreciation of the patient understanding of our friends in Zagreb and Belgrade, ^{and other cities and towns of Yugoslavia.} but that of all your other guests here at Makaraska. Again my personal thanks and best wishes.
