Dear Henry:

We received your gift, and are prayerfully obliged to you. We are in the 33rd year of publication only because of you and others who link our efforts in some way with the preservation of what Whittaker Chambers used to call "the tokens of hope and truth." There are stormy political days ahead of us, and we hope to keep this beacon lit. National Review is just that, in my perspective, and it is you who are sustaining it.

Ever cordially,

WFB

Wm. F. Buckley Jr.

*Henry: I hope you
of you. I missed
you too at your house. Bill*

P.S. You will be receiving some time during the year a small but concrete gesture, hardly intended as reciprocal, but nonetheless -- that: a gesture of our gratitude as also, we like to think, the gratitude of the republic.
